PREFACE.

THE great need of a full Index to such a book as Pepys's Diary is evident to all, but when we come to produce the Index it is not equally certain that we shall be able completely to satisfy those who are to use it.

There are two great difficulties which the indexer has to face. The first is, that the consulters of a book consisting of so miscellaneous a contents as this one, come to it with such different tastes and with such different objects that it is almost impossible to please them all. The second is inherent to the compilation of the Index itself. A diary such as this presents special pitfalls for the most careful indexer, because Pepys wrote for himself alone, and he knew to whom he referred, but we can never be sure that people with the same name were actually the same persons. To instance one case out of many, Pepys constantly met two Mrs. Turners, one his cousin, and the other the wife of a clerk of the Navy Office. In many references there are circumstances that help us to decide which one is referred to, but in others we can never be quite sure.

Having mentioned these pitfalls, I may add an explanation of how the long entries have been arranged. Nothing is more annoying in using an index than to find when looking up a reference that the name alone is mentioned. To overcome this objection the entries are analyzed and printed in chronological order, and at the end are the references to those places where the name only is mentioned, so that these need not be searched for by those who do not require them.

The Index has been compiled by Mr. A. R. Cowdroy under my superintendence, and I hope it will give satisfaction to those who have occasion to consult it.

The frontispiece to this volume is taken from Pepys's larger book-plate, engraved by R. White after Kneller's portrait of the Diarist. This plate was also used as a frontispiece to some copies of Pepys's "Memoires relating to the State of the Royal Navy of England," 1690.
